I want a problem that makes me feel guilty for not knowing enough.

For me, deciding what comes next isn't always about the pay.

I had four areas under me in one process.

I solved all the problems across them—and that was why I moved out.

After that, I moved into a role in risk management.

Something has to bother me enough to keep me thinking.

I need to be interested in what's going on and how I could solve it.

I need the challenge to send me off to learn.

Then I can come back to the problem and try to solve it.

For that appetite for problem-solving practice:

Founder's Find Membership offers live cases and simulations, with scoring standards showing where your answers fall short.
Apply for Membership at foundersfind.club.