The move beyond execution

Your CV shows delivery. Where are the decisions?

You’re applying for more ownership. Your CV lists what you delivered—but leaves out what you chose, rejected or protected.

Delivery and judgement

Same work. Two different questions.

A delivery record matters. A decision record makes the judgement behind it available to examine.

Delivery

What did you get done?

Decision

What did you choose—and why was it worth the trade-off?

From responsibility to evidence

Make one real decision readable.

Choose a piece of work you actually owned.

Context
What constraint made the choice difficult?

Alternatives
What could you have done instead?

Reasoning
What did you protect—and what cost did you accept?

Show the reasoning, not just the recommendation.

Practice you can show

Then put the reasoning beside a standard.

In Proving Ground, you make decisions inside one simulated company. Calls are marked against a published standard; marked work becomes a proof-of-skill portfolio.

Evidence of how you think—not a job you have held.

Before considering an application

Try three calls. Inspect the assessment.

The Diwali Surge example follows three calls from one founder's day. Make your choices, then examine what the standard asks of them.

Try the example on the Proving Ground page.
