Planning your home clean

Choose the jobs before the hours.

Your bedroom count describes the space. It doesn't describe all the cleaning you want done.

Space and contents

The room count leaves something out.

What's in those rooms matters too. When describing your home, include how much is in each room—not just how many rooms there are.

The work within the room

Same room. Different depth of cleaning.

The level of cleaning you want also affects the hours needed. Name the jobs you mean rather than relying on “clean the bathroom” to explain everything.

A room name isn’t a task list.

A useful way to brief

Make the priorities visible.

If you want fewer hours, prioritise the rooms and jobs. Try separating your brief into two parts:

First priorities

The rooms and specific jobs you most want completed.

If time allows

The remaining jobs you're comfortable putting after those.

Before you request a quote

A clearer brief starts with the work.

Rooms, contents, cleaning depth and priorities: together, they describe more than a bedroom count alone.
